

INTRODUCTION

If our aim in youth ministry is to see young people develop their own personal relationship with Jesus, is there anything more important for us as youth leaders to teach than to help them hear His voice?

Jesus said that His sheep would hear His voice, that He would know them personally, and that they would follow Him (John 10:27). Sadly we have a tendency to help young people know about Him and follow His rules, missing the relational dimension so essential to becoming a lifelong follower.

“Teaching Teens to Hear the Voice of God” will show you how to redress any imbalance in your ministry making Jesus—and not just His rules, central to discipleship.

You will receive helpful insights along with practical tools and exercises that will help you teach your teens to hear the voice of God.

Teaching Teens to Hear the Voice of

GOD

A Practical Workshop for Youth Leaders
(and Young People)

“Most of us easily subscribe to the notion that Christianity is not about a set of rules but about a relationship with the God of all Creation. Yet all too often we revert to teaching it as a set of rules to be followed and neglect to teach young people how to establish a two way dialogue with their Heavenly Father.”

THE SEMINAR

“Teaching Teens to hear the Voice of God” consists of four sessions each of about 1 hour, although this can vary given the nature of the content and the desire to give God space to speak and lead.

The first session establishes some foundational points of theory and practice and are followed by three workshops in which participant’s have the opportunity to apply what they are learning.

The style throughout is interactive and practical with space allowed for discussion, personal reflection and application.

Participants receive a workbook with written notes and space to record their thoughts and observations, along with follow up exercises to work on.

While the seminar is primarily aimed at youth leaders, equipping them to implement the content learned, older teens may also benefit from attending.
